

Museum now partly open

The ground floor of the new museum is now partly open, accessed via Hitchin Town Hall main entrance, Tuesday to Saturday 10.30am to 4.30pm. Visitors can see the 'Discovering North Herts' gallery, and the temporary exhibition gallery. Currently we have a really good exhibition of Shell advertising posters from the 1930s, with images of Britain by artists including Paul Nash and Graham Sutherland. This runs until 3 March, to be followed by 'Artists at War'; WW1 art from the Ashmolean Museum, Oxford, starting on 17 March.

Duncan Grant poster for Shell, 1932

Upstairs 'Living in North Herts.' gallery

We're running 'Behind the Scenes' tours of our upstairs 'Living in North Herts' gallery, on Mondays at 3pm and Thursdays at 5pm. These can be booked directly on Eventbrite, or else via on a link on the museums pages of the NHDC website:

<https://www.north-herts.gov.uk/home/museums/north-hertfordshire-museum>

Museum now partly open

Another view of the upper gallery

Nowadays we use the Museum Facebook pages for updates rather than this blog, so it is worth keeping an eye on what's happening there:

<https://www.facebook.com/northhertsmuseum/>

Share this:

Email

Print

Facebook

Twitter

Pocket

WhatsApp

Pinterest

Reddit